

HARVARD BUSINESS SCHOOL

INSIDER TIPS

ABOUT HARVARD

The Harvard Business School has a brand like no other business school in the world. And it is this magnetic appeal that persuades over 9,000 hopefuls to compete for one of the roughly 930* places in its MBA program. The HBS Admissions team is made up of only five key individuals. Such limited staff resources may in part explain the school's move towards a shorter, more streamlined application in recent years. HBS now only requires two recommendations and just one essay. Your resume and recommendations have never carried so much weight.

HBS has more CEOs of Fortune 500 companies than any other MBA program, a couple of former Presidents (U.S. and Mexico), and an unrivaled global network of influence. This conservative symbol of success, with its old red brick campus and the highest admissions yield, nevertheless faces a battle to win the hearts of minds of the tech industry. For many applicants, the closest they will get to a Harvard MBA is a T-shirt, but for a select few it will be the experience of a lifetime.

STRENGTHS AND SPECIALIZATIONS

With a world-renowned faculty, HBS can claim academic excellence in many fields. Perhaps best known for General Management and a dedication to the case method, the school touts Leadership, Entrepreneurship, Strategy and CSR among the top areas of study.

The typical class size at HBS is approximately 930. Due to deferrals offered during the COVID-19 pandemic, the class of 2022 size was 732, while the classes of 2023 are expected to be approximately 1000 before returning to ~930.

TOP TIPS FOR ACING YOUR HARVARD APPLICATION

BY MALVINA MILLER COMPLAINVILLE

One of Fortuna's resident Harvard Business School experts, Malvina is former Assistant Director of Career Services at HBS. As Head of the HBS Programs and Communication team she was responsible for providing career training and guidance to students, and as a member of the career coaching team she has spent literally hundreds of hours coaching students on how to achieve their post-MBA goals.

HBS gives greater weight to leadership experience, and less weight to intellectual horsepower than some other top schools.

1

STAND OUT FROM YOUR PEER GROUP

Given the thousands upon thousands of candidates that HBS gets to choose from, successful candidates are those who manage to show how they stand out from the crowd. The HBS admissions team puts a great deal of effort into crafting a diverse and dynamic classroom, with individuals who will bring perspective and experience that is different from their fellow classmates. Candidates who have strong experience but whose profile seems undifferentiated from the hundreds or thousands of other candidates from the same sector are not going to make the cut. So give some deep thought to what is unique about your background and about your potential contribution to the program.

SHOWCASE YOUR LEADERSHIP

2

Leadership is at the core of the Harvard experience. HBS is known as the school for general management training, specifically developing leaders who will “contribute to the well being of society.” The admissions office gives greater weight to leadership experience, and less weight to intellectual horsepower than some other top schools. So when applying to HBS, make sure your leadership experience comes across prominently, not just as a one-off, but as a pattern of leadership that can be demonstrated at different stages of your development.

3

ARTICULATE A CLEAR, AMBITIOUS AND REALISTIC CAREER VISION

Reflect on how your career vision aligns with HBS's values. Your career vision should be detailed, with short-term goals and long-term goals. It should be ambitious and achievable. And if it seems to you that west coast rival Stanford GSB has cornered the market in careers that change lives and change organizations, think again. Harvard is equally interested in finding out what impact you intend to have on an institution, an industry and the world. You should also think of two different paths that could lead you to your long-term career goals; this gives you more flexibility if one of your short-term goals prove challenging to achieve.

SPEND TIME FINE-TUNING YOUR RESUME

4

The resume is often the first element that the file reader will review, so it needs to pack a punch. And with Harvard now down to only one optional essay your resume has never been more important. Make sure that the strength of your credentials comes across very strongly. Highlight your achievements and the impact you had in your roles. Quantify your achievements and impact with specific numbers wherever possible. HBS is looking for candidates on a rapid career trajectory, so make sure your evolution (promotions, increasing scope of responsibility, etc.) is clearly demonstrated. You may want to consider adopting the HBS resume format.

5

DEMONSTRATE STRONG COMMUNICATION SKILLS

Class participation makes up 50% of the student grade. You are expected to speak up confidently and participate actively in class. The case method requires that you listen carefully to the discussion unfolding in the classroom and be prepared to jump in and share an insightful point in a clear and concise manner. In your application, you should think of how you can showcase your strong communication skills – for instance, discuss your success presenting in public and engaging in debates.
