

MICHIGAN ROSS

INSIDER TIPS

ABOUT ROSS

The University of Michigan Business School was founded in 1924 and became Michigan Ross in 2004 when Stephen M. Ross, a New York real-estate developer and undergraduate alumnus, donated $100M to the school. It's consistently ranked among the top 13 MBA programs by US News.

Ross has a heavy focus on action learning as evidenced through their REAL learning philosophy; 25 years ago they launched the signature Multidisciplinary Action Projects (MAP) program, and the emphasis has only grown since. Ross students want to do well in business, grow through doing ("learning business by doing business," as they say), and leave their communities and the world better than they found them.

The Ross culture is incredibly spirited, team-oriented, and close-knit - which extends from the classroom and extracurriculars (applicants need to know the culture of maize and blue, from The Bus may it rest in peace to The Big House) to core action learning programs like MAP, IMAP, and EMAP. It's location in Ann Arbor, Michigan envelops students in the vibrant college town vibe while being less than an hour from downtown Detroit.

TOP TIPS FOR ACING YOUR ROSS APPLICATION

BY CASSANDRA PITTMAN

A Columbia MBA and former member of the admissions teams at both INSEAD and London Business School, Cassandra brings to the Fortuna team a unique breadth of knowledge and insight into the admissions processes at top US and International programs. A certified coach, she combines a career in admissions, consulting, and creative business with her knack for weaving a compelling narrative and her passion for helping leaders realize their potential to help Fortuna clients achieve their dreams.

Leave your ego at the door.

LEAVE YOUR EGO AT THE DOOR

Ross's focus on action-based learning means that you'll be working in teams from day one, and through much of your program. Ross is looking for leaders who will make a real-world impact and that means working well with others. Resist the temptation to paint yourself as a hero throughout your application. Instead, think hard about examples you have of being part of a team that has achieved extraordinary results, about the roles you played within those teams, and about what makes you a fantastic member of any team. This is a quality you'll want to make sure your recommenders stress as well.

CONSIDER LOCATION AND CULTURE

2

Ann Arbor may not have the immediate sex appeal of New York City or San Francisco, but Ross sees that as an advantage. You'll often see school marketing literature referring to the 'best of both worlds', having the convenience of a big city, with the charm of a small town. The opportunity to be a part of one of the largest student communities in the world while at the same time develop strong relationships within a smaller MBA cohort is also considered a plus. Throughout your application, you should demonstrate that you see Ross's location, size, and culture as an advantage.

CONNECT THE DOTS

Ross are remarkably open about the three criteria they evaluate every candidate against: ability to handle the coursework, ability to be a positive and contributing member of the Ross community, and ability to get a good job. Have these three criteria in mind when drafting your application. When done, ask a coach (or friend or colleague) to read it and rate you against each of the three. Keep refining your application until you are confident you have communicated your strengths in each one.

WRITE, REPEAT

Ross's admissions interviews are conducted by second year MBA participants and MBA alumni and they are conducted "blind". This means that interviewers see the resume of the applicant, but not the application itself. If you are invited to an interview, remember to tell your story as well as you did in your essays, and that you can use the same examples you detailed throughout your application. It's also worth keeping in mind that interviews are matched randomly so there is no assurance that your interviewer will know about your field of work. Prepping your interview with someone with no background in your industry will help you avoid industry jargon that can lessen your impact.

SHOW YOUR IMPACT

Ross's MAP, REAL program and many entrepreneurial resources underscore just how much the school values real world impact. Rather than focus mainly on your actions - things you have done - focus on your impact - how things are measurably different because of the actions you have taken. Be sure that this is a common theme throughout every aspect of your application, from your resume to your recommendations to your essays.
